This agreement outlines conditions regarding any application materials, script or treatment ("Materials") submitted to the Directing Workshop for Women at the American Film Institute ("AFI"). I understand that AFI requires the non-exclusive worldwide rights to Materials, in perpetuity and for all venues, if those materials are made as part of a production program at AFI. These rights must be provided before a project's script can receive final production approval. In signing this agreement, I accept each of the following provisions:

I acknowledge that the Materials identified below are not submitted to AFI in confidence and that no confidential relationship is intended or established between us by my submission of materials. I have the rights and authority to submit the Materials to you, which will grant AFI the right to consider my project for production as a videotape project and all other rights, including copyrights, for the finished project only.

I acknowledge this submission agreement does not constitute all required documentation and releases regarding those rights and authority to the Materials. I understand that AFI will require all appropriate releases, such as those from writer(s), holder(s) of underlying rights, etc., to be supplied if I am accepted into the Directing Workshop for Women and use the Materials for my project.
